Suicide Bereavement Training

About PABBS

- Informed by a three-year National Institute of Health and Care Research (NIHR)-funded study conducted by Dr Sharon McDonnell and her team at the University of Manchester, which explored the experiences and needs of those bereaved by suicide and those responsible for their care
- Evidence-based, practice-based and CPD-accredited suicide bereavement training for those who come into contact and/or support those bereaved or affected by suicide
- One-day interactive workshop delivered by highly skilled/qualified trainers who have both practical and lived experience of responding to suicide
- Enhances knowledge, confidence and skills to equip you to respond to individuals bereaved or impacted by suicide when it matters most
- Recognises and addresses the personal impact responding to suicide has on staff
- Provides tools, techniques and practical information to help enhance well-being when responding to those bereaved or affected by suicide
- Over 300 testimonials from a range of professionals who have attended the training

“I came away from the day inspired and humbled but most notably equipped with deeper insights into postvention support which I hope can be integrated into the community I currently work in.”

Kate Simpson, University Counsellor and Clinical Lead Support

“Two very experienced trainers presenting from a place of lived experience coupled with a wealth of research experience - a very powerful combination. Informative, engaging and insightful. Highly recommended.”

Fiona Gilpin, Project Lead, Emerge Advocacy

“Just utterly fantastic all round. I am so inspired and fired up with ways to enhance our service delivery!”

Elizabeth Ballinger, Senior Suicide Intervention Worker

“I would recommend this training to everyone, regardless of knowledge and experience as you will definitely learn something new. This space felt really safe, and the trainers held us all very well. So glad I did the training.”

Rachael Hattee, Counsellor

“This is a brilliant course, inspiring and invigorating. It has elements of everything from reflection, reviewing, renewing thoughts, ideas and practice with a practical, interactive and safe environment. There are opportunities to engage, liaise and learn from others. I loved it and it flew by. I would thoroughly recommend it to anyone working in any area of suicide bereavement, prevention and postvention settings.”

Vikki Boggan, Suicide Safer Schools Co-ordinator
